SCH. ARETHUSA STOCKED $6356

Big Trip of Capt. Clayton
Morrissey Taken on Frozen Bait.

Capt. Clayton Morrissey is still at it and as a result of his recent big shack fare, sch. Arethusa stocked the fine sum of $6536.58, giving the 24 sharemen just $117.16 each clear. The Arethusa left here on June 22 and returned here last Sunday. Capt. Morrissey took one baiting and on July 10 put into Queensport, N. S., for a second baiting. Bait was a pretty scarce article, Capt. Morrissey found, but he managed to secure some frozen herring and took aboard 200 crates, purchased from Matthews & Scott. Fishing continued good the supply lasting about two weeks and on July 24 he returned again to Queensport and took aboard 250 crates of frozen herring from Matthews & Scott, on which he finished his trip, which is the largest shack fare landed here this season. Capt. Morrissey has again demonstrated that frozen bait is not so bad after all, and instead of losing time, cruising around, he improved the opportunity to get a trip with frozen herring.

Salt Scarcity Threatened at Labrador.
The announcement in yesterday's message from the Sagona, that there was a scarcity of salt on Labrador, creates a very serious situation, as it indicates the possibility that a lot of the fish taken there may spoil for want of this curative agency, the St. John's, N. F., Chronicle says. Inquiries of Water Street merchants elicits the fact that one of the reasons for the shortage is that a number of vessels with salt cargoes have been unable to reach the coast owing to the prevailing weather conditions and another circumstances tending in the same direction is that planters who proceed to the coast naturally do not wish to carry too much salt because of the lack of storage facilities there and thus, when a big inrush of fish comes, they find themselves without enough salt for their needs. It is regrettable that there should be a shortage of salt, but it is to be hoped that within the next few days the weather will change so that it will be possible for salt laden vessels to arrive and for other stocks to be sent on from there. Another difficulty that will operate with people on Labrador this season is the same that is being felt by people around our own seaboard, namely, that owing to the weather conditions at present it is next to impossible to cure what little fish has been taken, and unless a radical change in the weather occurs, dealers fear now that there will be a lot of poor fish out of what has been taken.

The Swordfishing Fleet.
While the Portland schooner Albert D. Willard is not the high liner among the swordfishermen from Portland, the men under the command of Capt. Frank Doughty have no cause to complain. The schooner returned to Portland from Boston Thursday after another fare had been landed and the men reported they had shared $317 each to date. The Willard started fishing the first of July. Since that time, she has landed three fares in Boston. Wednesday the schooner had 98 swordfish. The market was a bit off, but for all that the schooner received $1128.37 for her fare. For the season to date, the stock has been $4300. The high liner of the Portland fleet is the schooner Topsall Girl, Capt. George York.

The change will increase the illuminating power of the fixed light from 1000 candle power to 27,000, and that of the flash from 38,000 to 220,000 candle power. It is announced that Great Point light, on the northeastern extremity of Nantucket Island, will also have an oil vapor lamp on October 1. Great Point does not have a flash light, but the change will increase the intensity of its fixed light from 2750 to 18,000 candle power.

Nickerson of this port, which came in late in the evening with 350 barrels of fish. Squid also were more plentiful on Tuesday last than for several days, the traps getting them that day where the dorymen failed to catch many.

Selma was purchased by the same company, her white fish selling for 11 1-4 cents, large gray, five and one-fourth cents and medium gray, nine and one-fourth cents a pound. Sch. Georgiana had 2000 weight of halibut, which sold to the same concern, at the same figure paid for the fare of the Hope.

Aug. 19.

HALIBUTER HAS FOUR MEN ASTRAY.

With her colors at main-mast, sch. Selma, Capt. Albert Saulnberg, arrived here shortly before 9 o'clock this morning from a halibuting trip, and reported the loss of four of his men, who went astray from the craft last Wednesday.

The missing men are William McKay and Frank Frederickson who were in one dory and Eric Anderson and James Murphy who were in the other. The Selma was fishing on Emerald bank last Wednesday, when a fog shut in. Capt. Saulnberg picked up all his dories but two, and although he cruised about the bank and made an extended search for the men, he was unable to locate them.

It is the opinion of the skipper that the men will be picked up, for there was no wind or sea at the time. Other crafts were in the vicinity at the time, so the chances of their being rescued are excellent.

The Selma brought home 11,000 weight of halibut, besides 25,000 pounds of fresh fish and 10,000 pounds of salt cod.

BIG DEMAND FOR PREPARED FISH.

Result of Increased Price of Meats and Other Food Products.

Wholesale grocers in all sections of the country have been having an unusual number of inquiries for prepared fish, says the Wholesale Grocer of Chicago. This includes salt fish in various kinds of packages and fish of all sorts in cans.

This unusual inquiry is due no doubt to the advanced cost of meat and other food products. People who have been in the habit of buying meat in liberal quantities have been frightened by the high price into looking about for a substitute. Naturally they turn to fish. But the trouble is, in a general way with the buyers, they do not know fish. In some mysterious way they have heard that fish is a good substitute for meat, and without knowing much about the quality of fish they have rushed into the market to get a load that would satisfy those of their customers who are disposed to change from expensive meat to inexpensive food from our big fresh water rivers and lakes or the ocean.

The difficulty is that the public at large, more especially the western public, do not know fish as they should be known. Fish with them has been a sort of necessity rather than the specialty it should be considered.

All along our American sea coast from the Canadian line to the Mexican frontier the people are fish eaters. On the other side of the country the entire Pacific coast line is inhabited by fish eaters and far up into the interior where the fish from the sea migrate, the people make fish an important part of their diet.

It is so in other parts of the world. People who live near the sea acquire the fish eating habit, and their taste for fish abides with them forever.

Always the people of the interior partake sparingly of fish. The fish in the first instance are not to be had in the interior without the cost of additional effort, and the fish eating habit is not formed.

In recent years it has been made possible to put fish down in the interior of the country at a comparatively small cost. But this low cost of good fish was not particularly noticeable so long as meat could be had at a fair price. The meat eaters could not be induced to change to more of a fish diet. Since meat of all kinds has advanced to the exceptionally high price that prevails today and further since the people have become convinced that cheap meat is a thing of the past there is a disposition to look about for a substitute.

Naturally the inquiry turns to fish. The people, of course, who have not been fish eaters from force of habit know very little about the great variety of excellent prepared fish there is on the market. Fish that is palatable, healthful and cheap compared with the price of meat.

The trouble is, that these people do not know as much about the virtue of fish as they should know, and the retail grocer is not able to tell them much about fish because he has not been educated himself. And the wholesale grocer and his salesmen have not promoted this knowledge among retailers. In other words, the wholesaler has not pushed fish.

There never has been a better time than the present for the wholesale grocer and his salesmen to feature fish making a campaign of education among retailers. The time is opportune because the people are in an inquiring mood, ready to listen to any reasonable story about a substitute for meat.

Before the retailer can tell his patrons about the various kinds of good prepared fish on the market he must learn about them himself and the promoting of this knowledge is the work of the salesman. Once the retailer understands prepared fish and its uses he will have little trouble in developing a profitable fish trade.

For one thing prepared fish is not difficult to handle, if we except salt fish in barrels. Fish in cans or dried and smoked fish is easily taken care of, and the risk of loss is very small.

It is with fish as it is with other kinds of goods. Sales must be promoted. The broker or jobber or retailer who sits fast waiting for people to come for goods will not make a long list of sales during the year. The man who sells must promote his sales by letting people know he has something good that they need. The fish business needs promoting, and there never was a better time for such work than the present.

If the jobber and his salesmen will push fish in the various ways that may suggest themselves the retailer may be induced to carry on the work by making displays and in other ways calling the attention of the consumer to his goods.
